There is a field
   Where trees and plants
       Of indescribable beauty grow,
Ineffably precious.
   Fulfilled is the eye
       That has once beheld it.
Trees, plants,
   Joyous holy souls are they
       In their growing and becoming.
Wait they must
   For the Master of the Field,
       Who alone can mend, replant.
